

Samira Felix

bioSite Project

Ideas, Sketches, and Inspiration

Fernando Contreras

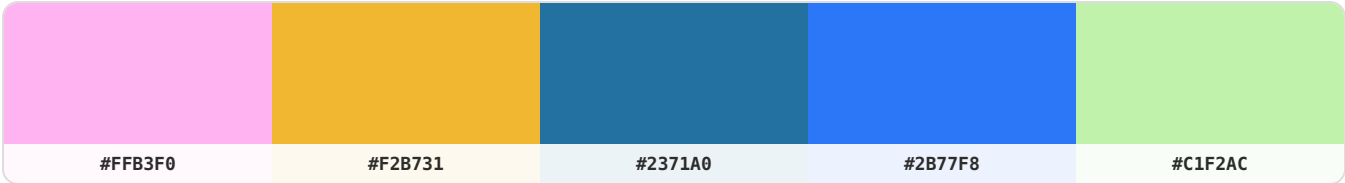

CSD 340 Web Development with HTML and CSS

Module 5.2

June 27, 2026

Color Palette

Pink was chosen as the primary accent because it is Samira's favorite color, making the design personal to her — the goal of this project is to design for the subject, not the designer. The pink and gold bring warmth and energy that reflect her approachable personality, while the blues ground the design with a sense of trust and credibility appropriate for someone in the journalism field.

- Pink — primary accent (Samira's favorite)
- Gold — secondary accent & headings
- Dark Blue — structure & backgrounds
- Bright Blue — links
- Light Green — small accent touches

Front-end Style Guide

Typography

Primary typeface: Helvetica / Arial (sans-serif) for clean readability across all pages.

H1 / TITLE	Samira
H2 / SECTION	About Me
H3 / SUBHEAD	Accomplishments
BODY	This is body copy used for paragraphs and longer text content throughout the site.
CAPTION	Photo caption / small supporting text

Buttons

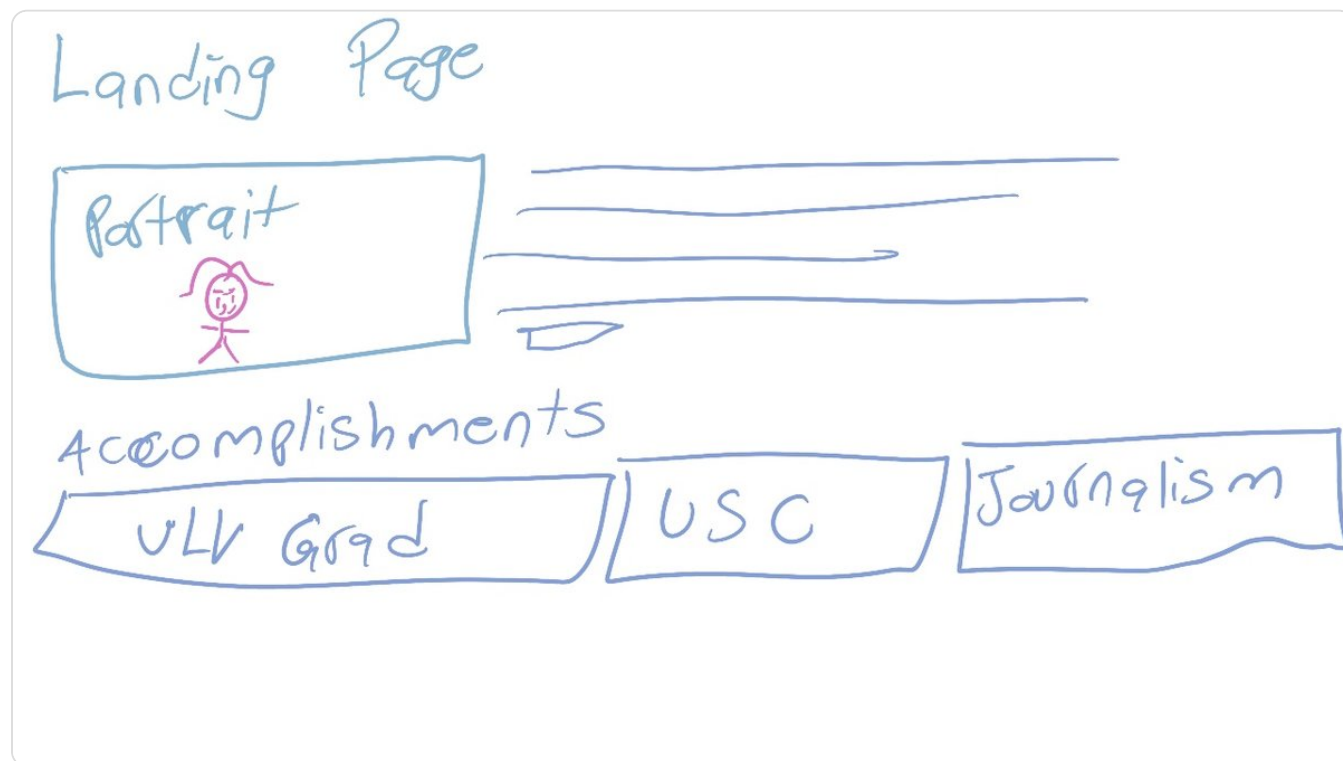

UI Elements

- Links Bright Blue (#2B77F8), underline on hover
- Borders 1px solid, 6–8px border radius on cards
- Cards White background, subtle border, rounded corners
- Spacing Generous whitespace, consistent padding

Wireframes & Sketches

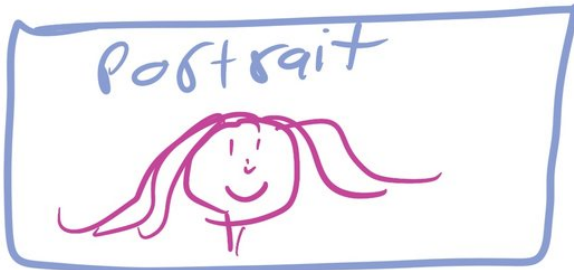

The chosen design direction uses a "split hero" layout — pairing Samira's portrait with an introduction so the first impression is both personal and professional. The same structure carries across all three pages for consistency.

Page 1

Landing page — portrait hero with intro, followed by three accomplishment cards (ULV graduation, USC Masters, journalism)

About Page

Quick Facts

About page — portrait with the 250-word bio alongside, then a Quick Facts section below

Hobbies Page

Museum

Coffee

Pickleball

more about Samira

Another pic
#1 of
Museum
again

Hobbies page — museum, coffee, and pickleball cards across the top, with a "more about Samira" section below

Interview with Samira

Conducted by Fernando Contreras — ten questions exploring Samira's background, career, and personal interests.

1. Where did you grow up and how did that shape who you are today?

Los Angeles, California. I grew up in the City of El Monte. I went to an elementary school that allowed my mom to be a big part of its activities and my school life because she was always around, whether it be in a classroom or the teachers lounge. This also gave her the opportunity to befriend many of the teachers at this school, which allowed me to have mentors who went the college route and always encouraged me to do the same. Growing up in this environment shaped me into who I am today because from a very young age I was surrounded by women who chased their goals.

2. What made you want to study journalism, and when did you first know it was the right path for you?

I did not know that I wanted to study journalism until I started college and took a journalism 101 class. In this class I found a passion for writing stories that informed my audience of what was happening around them so that they could make informed opinions and decisions.

3. What has been your most memorable story or reporting experience so far?

My most memorable story would be "Fields of Resistance," an article regarding how immigration enforcement affects undocumented farmworkers, because I am very passionate about immigration and helping the public understand the importance of what is going on around them whether it be globally or locally.

4. What does a typical day look like for you as a journalist?

A typical day involves researching stories, reaching out to sources, conducting interviews, and writing. No two days look exactly alike, which is part of what keeps the work exciting.

5. Who has been your biggest inspiration or role model in journalism?

My peers have been my biggest inspirations in journalism because we are all working towards the same goal, which is to write stories that are informative.

6. What was the biggest challenge you faced during your time at USC and how did you overcome it?

During my time at USC I had to learn how to be persistent and not give up so easily because as a journalist I receive a lot of "no's."

7. Outside of journalism, what hobbies or activities bring you joy?

I love going on walks, reading, exploring coffee shops, baking, etc.

8. You love exploring coffee shops — what does that mean to you and do you have a favorite spot?

There was a time where my anxiety ruled my life and I never really went out. Exploring coffee shops gives me an opportunity to destress, explore a new area, and it gets me out of the house. My favorite coffee shop is Yeems.

9. What are your goals for the next five years in your career?

My main goal at the moment is to just get a job in the journalism industry.

10. What advice would you give to someone who wants to pursue journalism today?

Do not let the fact that you are quiet or an introvert stop you from pursuing journalism, because even introverts can be journalists.

About Samira Felix

A formalized write-up based on the interview and research. This will appear on the About page in a later module.

Samira Felix grew up in El Monte, California, a city in the heart of Los Angeles County. From an early age she was surrounded by women who chased their goals — her mother was deeply involved in her elementary school, which gave Samira access to teachers and mentors who consistently encouraged her to pursue higher education. That environment planted a seed that would shape everything that followed.

She discovered journalism almost by accident. It was not until she enrolled in a Journalism 101 class during her first year of college that she found her calling — writing stories that inform people about the world around them so they can form their own opinions and make meaningful decisions. That passion carried her through a Bachelor's degree at the University of La Verne and then a Master's degree in Journalism from the USC Annenberg School for Communication and Journalism, one of the most respected journalism programs in the country.

Her most meaningful work to date is a piece called "Fields of Resistance," which examines how immigration enforcement affects undocumented farmworkers. The story reflects what drives her most — giving a voice to communities whose stories are often overlooked.

Outside of the newsroom, Samira finds balance through walks, reading, baking, and exploring coffee shops around Los Angeles. What started as a way to manage anxiety has become one of her favorite rituals — stepping into a new neighborhood, finding a quiet corner, and breathing. Her favorite spot is Yeems.

She is currently pursuing her first role in the journalism industry, with her sights set on telling stories that matter.

Project Images

The following images have been gathered and organized by where they will appear in the final site, building a visual story for visitors to follow.

Portrait — About Page

Professional headshot

Goals & Accomplishments — Landing Page

University of La Verne graduation

USC Annenberg Masters, Class of 2025

On-camera reporting

Hobbies — Hobbies Page

Exploring museums

Coffee shop adventures

Playing pickleball

Journalism in Action — supporting images

Interviewing State Senator Cristina Castro

Covering a farmworker rights march

Reporting at a community rally